CASE IN POINT

Global Home Improvement Retailer Needs Atlanta Rail warehouse for Lumber Transloading

The Challenge

A multi-national Home Improvement retailer with lumber suppliers scattered across the Southeastern United States needed a centralized rail warehouse in Atlanta GA to forward stock hurricane supplies on a federal government contract. They approached Porter Logistics to serve as the rail-served bulk commodity warehouse in Atlanta - they would require both boxcar unloading for plywood that could not be exposed to the elements as well as center beam unloading outside for covered wood that would need outside storage space.

How we Helped

To proactively address these issues, Porter Logistics sent a project manager out to the company's current industrial space. Working with the Senior Director and Senior Operations Manager running the plant, Porter defined the scope and requirements. Porter Logistics worked with Omnitrax - the short line partner for Porter Logistics' bulk commodity warehouse in Atlanta - and CSX, the Tier 1 rail partner, to identify the optimal amount of weekly turns to properly service our client's needs. In addition, Porter procured the necessary heavy duty forklifts with lumber forks in order to meet the weight requirements of the product. When hurricanes hit the Gulf or Atlantic coasts, Porter works through the weekend to transload lumber from rail to warehouse to truck so that Americans in need have the supplies they need to build back from these devastating storms.

Results

The client is thrilled with Porter Logistics and is a long-term client. Every year Porter Logistics builds inventory in advance of Hurricane season and dispatches the necessary supplies out to needy customers. Porter's bulk commodity warehouse solutions in Atlanta get the job done.

"Porter's rail warehouse capability in Atlanta is critical for us to meet our obligations to the Federal Government - FDC Resupply Manager"
